ABOUT KINZA

Kinza Kasher is a New York–based interaction designer and strategist whose work sits at the intersection of design, technology, storytelling, and human-centered problem-solving. Her practice spans UX and product design, digital illustration, brand systems, data visualization, content strategy, and creative direction. Across projects, Kinza is especially interested in how thoughtful design can clarify complex ideas, shape meaningful experiences, and make information more accessible. She brings a research-driven and visually sensitive approach to her work, moving between strategy and execution to create digital and visual experiences that are both purposeful and engaging. Kinza is also an educator in Interaction Design at SUNY Farmingdale and the co-designer and co-owner of Kasher Gallery and Studios. Through the gallery, she helps create space for one story at a time, developing exhibitions and visual experiences that center artists, ideas, and community. Alongside this work, Kasher Gallery and Studios builds technology and digital tools for businesses, bringing together design, storytelling, and strategy to support meaningful growth.
